"Now, sir, that is not fair. Of course we weren't schoolmates in 1898," answered Miss Stedeker.

Mr. Crocker is a tall, broad-shouldered man, with whiskers and a large bald spot. He sat mute beside his counsel. Not once did he glance at the plaintiff, who answered questions with the rapidity of a rapid-firing gun.

After being shown several letters which are marked as exhibits in the case Miss Stedeker was requested to read them closely.

"I shall certainly do so," she declared, adjusting her glasses. Frequently during the perusal of the letters Miss Stedeker uttered exclamations of surprise, which she supplemented with: "Never saw this before in my life." "Horribe!" "Awful!"
"Ever hear the liker "Well. I declare!" "I repudiate these letters fully—entirely. I never saw them before!" said Miss Stedeker, sweeping the letters across the counsels' table.

WHITE PLAINS, June 2.—Supreme Two pennies given to him by his mother as a reward for being "a good boy" was the cause this afternoon of five-year-old Arthur White being perhaps fatally injured. He is now in Roosevelt Hospital unconscious from a fall from a second-story window. The surgeons say he cannot live.

The boy returned to his home at No. 318 West Forty-fourth street at about 2 o'clock after attending a kindergaten school. He told his mother that he had been told by his teacher that he was a "good boy," and Mrs. White, pleased with the little fellow, gave him two pennies to spend as he wished.

With his prize clutched tightly in his chubby hand, the boy leaned out of a front window before deciding where he would spend his wealth. He spied a pushcart man coming up the street with a lot of big yellow bananas, and at once he decided on that fruit. Waving his tiny arms and shouting justily, he tried to attract the peddler's attention. He leaned out of the window too far in his eagerness and fell.

LONDON PREPARES FOR RIOTOUS NIGHT.

LONDON, June 2.—At seven o'clock this evening the streets of London were filling up, with every likelihood of a riotous night. Working people are parading, instead of going home. Flags, liquor and feathers are having an enormous sale, and traffic in the principal thoroughfares is growing more and more difficult. The vicinity of the Mansion House, the Strand and Piccadilly are the favorite centers of the crowds, and the metropolis seems to be giving itself over to unrestrained rejoicings.
